The Riksbank Introduces its New Website□

For the past six months the Riksbank has been developing a new website. Today, Tuesday, the new website will be launched at the following URL:
www.riksbank.com.

Journalists and researchers have their own links on the front page of the website, which link to their own respective sections. This is part of a process to make the website more accesible and userfriendly. Pressreleases and speeches are now available under the link "for journalists."

The structure of the website remains roughly the same. Some new links have been added, including price stability and financial stability, which are the main tasks of the Riksbank.

The website has also been redesigned in accordance with the graphic profile of the Riksbank. These changes are made with the hope that the Riksbank's website will now be more userfriendly and look more appealing to the eye.

The Riksbank's new website has been developed in cooperation with the corporate communications bureau Intellecta and the webtechnical company ElektroPost.
